1. [ ] there were four antiaircraft guns at a point about one-fifth of a mile from the pier at Huangp'u on the west side of the road leading from the wharves to Hengsha (N 23-06.65, E 113-26.5). There were also six or eight larger antiaircraft guns mounted on a small hill which lay just to the south of the town of Hengsha. The guns were surrounded by earthworks. There were about 20 Chinese Communist Army troops in Hengsha. They were unarmed, wore brown uniforms, and a breast patch with the Chinese characters for antiaircraft (fang k'ung, 7089/4500) on it.
2. The water depth over the first bar of the Pearl River was 9 feet at low water. [ ] There were no mooring buoys at Huangp'u. Ships either moored at wharves at the port or anchored in the stream. There was no dredging activity.
